Shel Silverstein, he was a truly amazing man, and most of these comments, are actually sickening. Shel was an incredible author, I wish he could still be here today. " My skin is kind of sort of brownish pinkish yellowish white, my eyes are greyish blueish green, but I'm told they look orange at night.

In this section of this poem, hyperbole is strongly used. As when you move your chin, it has no relation to your hip, you can see that Shel Silverstein really outdid himself this time! The second literary device I found in this poem was similes, in which one thing in the poem compares to something else.

Whatif by Shel Silverstein is a playful presentation of fears, struggles, and uncertainties that haunt Silverstein at “night,” and the organization of the presentation is something that crosses boundaries of logic and reason. Through this approach, he has crafted a poem that allows people across similar boundaries to share the commonality of experiencing “night”-time overthinking in a way that shows connection and allows us to see humor in the midst of the frustration.

Shel Silverstein compared controlling the world to steering a wheel in "God's Wheel.". The figurative language of a wheel allows Silverstein to easily conceptualize the huge amount of responsibility that God would have. The reader can imagine God standing by a wheel and picture how that wheel would
